

Our Values

The ceaseless quest for performance, the relentless diversification and regulation of business management, and the need for control generate increasingly complex organisations. The end result is a paradox: the more structures, rules, procedures and management dashboards there are, the less company executives feel in control of them or feel able to make them effective.

'Rolling out a business strategy', 'developing cross-functionality', 'securing commitment', 'boosting agility', 'delivering a successful digital transformation': just a few examples of goals that are forcing senior executives and their teams to confront organisational complexity.

We set up Grand Angle in 2006 precisely to help them find and action new levers for corporate performance. Decoding the human and cultural dynamics that condition business efficiency, identifying and acting on the pressure points of collective functioning, and creating positive dynamics within the organisation... these are the key contributions we can make.